DESCRIPTION OF LANDS

The Heintzman House, 135 Bay Thorn Drive, Thornhill

ALL AND SINGULAR that certain parcel or tract of land and premises situate lying and being in the Town of Markham, in the Regional Municipality of York and being composed of all of Block S as shown on a plan filed in the Registry Office for the Registry Division of the East and West Riding of the Regional Municipality of York as No. 7686.

SCHEDULE "B" TO BY-LAW NUMBER 331-83

REASONS FOR DESIGNATION (The Heintzman House, 135 Bay Thorn Drive, Thornhill)

Significance:

The Heintzman House, or Sunnyside Manor Farmhouse, is one of the most historic buildings in the Town of Markham. Part of its structure is adobe bricks which were part of the original house built before 1816. Each of the major owners of the house enlarged and modified it to suit their needs but they retained important architectural aspects contributed by earlier owners. The house's prominent owners included Colonel Cruikshank, the area's first Justice of the Peace, Samuel and Mary Francis, and Charles T. and Marion Heintzman of the Heintzman Piano Company.

Architectural Description

The Heintzman House is the earliest mudhouse on record in the Province of Ontario. Two storeys in height under a low hipped roof, its principal facade faces west. Resting on a shallow base of red brick and uniformly clad in stucco, the structure of the house includes adobe bricks, fired bricks and frame construction.

The central five bays are the oldest portion of the house and this section includes the adobe bricks. Extensions have been made to either side and to the rear of the original building, however, the external cladding material of stucco and other architectural features have been repeated on the newer sections so that an overall harmony has been preserved.

The main entrance is centrally located in the front facade. The wooden panelled door is surrounded by partial sidelights and a rectangular transom. The sidelights and transom are divided into rectangular and square panes by narrow wooden mullions. The natural colour of the wood is preserved. The door is reached by climbing three limestone steps, on either side of which are located wrought iron shoe-scarpes and carriage lamps.

There are two first storey windows in the central five bays placed symmetrically on either side of the central doorway. These casement windows extend the full height of the first storey and are five panes high and two panes wide. An ornate wrought iron railing sits on the narrow ledge which extends from the base of the windows. A continuous band of wooden molding delineates the upper extent of the first floor and a second molding runs parallel marking the lower extent of the second floor windows.

Above each of the ground floor windows in the central five bays is a double hung sash window with six over six window panes. The windows are trimmed by solid wood shutters decorated by a small cutout. The second floor windows on the southern and northern additions and on the addition to the rear of the house are of the same design with matching shutters.

A two storey portico extends from the central bay of the front facade and includes a balcony on the second floor level. Two pairs of Corinthian columns support the gable roof and pediment which is embellished with a triangular carving of flowers and abstract decorations. Six carved brackets support the balcony and a handrail with turned wooden posts rings its edge.

Extending from the south facade is a one storey fan-shaped conservatory. It rests on a brick base.

The hip roof is ringed by a copper trim which forms the gutter in most areas. The downspouts in the front facade are similarly copper and the overflow basin is decorated by a floral design. Regularly placed flat brackets are located under the wide eaves and painted a contrasting colour. One large brick chimney is located at the north edge of the central portion of the house. The natural, unpainted wooden panelling has been retained in the entrance hall, on the principal stairs and in the northern lounge. The art deco tiling and the domed painted ceiling in the bathrooms on the second floor are also of significance.
