THE PINGLE HOUSE

The Pingle House is one of Markham's few gable entry homes. Built in the Gothic Revival style of architecture, the 1-1/2 storey structure has board and batten cladding and an ornate Regency style verandah that wraps around three sides of the house. The single storey verandah is covered with a bellcast roof supported by pairs of finely turned posts while decorative fretwork trims its eaves. Double hung sash windows are framed with molded wood trim and wooden blinds.

The Barn, as it formed part of the original Pingle homestead, enhances the contextual integrity of the home at its new location and provides a good example of an early agricultural building. Of post and beam construction, the barn is clad in unfinished board and batten. The openings are rectangular with plain wooden trim and the roof is a medium pitch gable style.
